CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION 2003 FOOD BUILDING RESEARCH

Findings From On-Site Interviews
Summer 2003

Generations Research 2345 Yonge St., Suite 710 Toronto, ON M4P 2E5 416-489-6282

On-Site Interviews - Method

- 1,021 interviews were conducted with visitors in and around the Food Building to assess reaction to current issues facing this attraction (ie., being replaced by a soccer stadium).
- In addition, data from the 617 in-depth visitor exit interviews that shows the importance of the Food Building as part of the visitor experience is included in this report.
- Interviews were conducted for the duration of the 2003 season in order to achieve a representative cross section of all visitor types.

 Overall, data strongly suggests that the Food Building is an integral part of the CNE visitor experience. This extends across all visitor types, particularly those with greater visit history and frequency but also with newer visitors.

- The Food Building is is well liked by visitors for a number of reasons:
  - the unique mix of vendors ( lack of well known chains & cultural mix) is fun, refreshing and different from typical food courts;
  - its convenient, central location on the grounds makes the eating experience easier, more accessible and part of the overall experience – it does not require visitors to go out of their way in search of food. And considering that the average visitor is on the grounds for just over 6 hours, a meal and a rest are imperative.
  - Visitors still say it's a good place to get a deal.

Executive Summary

- The overwhelming majority of visitors say "no visit to the CNE is complete without a visit to the Food Building".
- The Food Building itself may be going through a slight renaissance. It's overall rating (out of 10) is on an increasing trend – 7.5 in 2001, 7.7 in 2002 and 7.9 this season. This is currently the highest rated pavilion on the grounds.

- It is the most visited building or attraction on the grounds by far with 75% to 80%+ of all visitors passing through its doors.
- The Food Building accounts for a significant portion of on grounds spending – about 20% of all expenditure (not including parking and costs of admission) and an impressive 80% of all food spending on the grounds.

Executive Summary

 Respondents were asked to rate different options if the Food Building were torn down in terms of future visit likelihood. None of the options have the power to improve on the current Food Building and would, in fact, impact negatively on likelihood of future visits.

- It becomes apparent that replicating The Food Building experience, and its positive associations, would be challenging.
- Research suggests that it would be in the CNE's best interests to maintain the Food Building as it is.
